How to use this guide

Sometimes reading the ingredient panel isn't enough to know how a product was made. Many GMO ingredients are listed on pack the same as their non-GMO counterparts. So, how can we spot genetically modified ingredients? Here's our pocket guide to GMOs in body care.

Where do GMOs show up in wellness products?

Genetically modified corn, soy and canola can be processed into a variety of ingredients, including oils for soaps and moisturizers, alcohol or citric acid. Also, microorganisms such as yeast or algae can be genetically modified to produce vitamins, fragrances, resveratrol and non-animal-derived collagen, squalane or spider silk. Functional ingredients such as humectants and surfactants can also be GMOs.

What botanicals are being made using genetic engineering?

Some GMO botanicals can include sandalwood, rose, amber, ambergris, oud/agarwood, citrus/orange, grapefruit, patchouli, vanilla, musk and mint.

Watch out for these key marketing terms

Some terms that are often used to describe GMOs include: bioengineered, bioidentical, bio fermentation, fermented, synthetic biology, synbio, synthetic ingredients, precision fermentation, precision engineered, engineered yeast, non-transgenic, and specific terms such as trans-resveratrol. Many companies are using sustainability claims, sometimes even labeling their products as "natural."
